*United Kingdom: [information as of 0400 EDT)
When ballot counting halted for the night Labor had a 67 seat lead over the Conservatives, but still was unsure of a working majority in Parliament.]

[Many of the 200 still-uncounted constituencies are in traditionally Conservative rural areas where returns are expected to cut into Labor's margin. On the basis of last night's returns, Labor Secretary Len Williams was predicting only a 15 to 26 seat margin in Parliament. Twenty seats generally is considered a working majority.]

[One prospective Labor minister, Patrick Gordon Walker, lost his seat, but reportedly might be named acting foreign minister pending his return to Parliament in an early by-election.]

[In spite of a significant increase in its total vote, the small Liberal party may lose rather than gain seats in Parliament. This would be a setback to Liberal hopes of holding a balance of power after a close election.]

[In commenting on the Soviet leadership changes, Labor Party leader Wilson said he would want an early meeting with the new Russian leaders, but that his first priority still is a trip to Washington to discuss problems confronting the alliance.]

NOTE

Yemen - Egypt - Saudi Arabia: The meeting which Nasir and Crown Prince Faysal have been trying to bring about between Yemeni republicans and Yemeni royalists may take place in the near future. This first session, which will include Egyptian and Saudi observers, probably will be used by each party primarily as a sounding board, although some form of temporary cease-fire may be arranged.
